

COMM 2200 Students Participate in World Speech Day

In Lori Kissinger's speech classes, students were connected to individuals all around the globe for World Speech Day on March 15.

For this assignment, each student was asked to present what makes this world a better place or what would make this world a better place. These presentations were live-streamed so that others around the globe could interact with the students during their presentations.

Each class was visited by an individual with a disability. Guests demonstrated how one can communicate without actuality speaking. These nonverbal presentations were made through arts such as song and dance. One class was even visited by a member of Word Up, an MTSU performance collective.

Click the link below to hear one student's presentation on making the world a better place:

<https://www.facebook.com/lori.kissinger.355/videos/1312499968788625/>