ABOUT THE MIDDLE TENNESSEE STATE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Housed in the College of Liberal Arts, the MTSU School of Music serves approximately 400 undergraduate and graduate music majors and minors from across the nation and abroad in ten Bachelor of Music and eight Master of Music degree programs, and four specialized minors. Ensembles include five wind bands, three orchestras, four choral ensembles, opera theater, vocal jazz ensemble, two big bands, multiple combos and chamber music ensembles, percussion ensembles, steel bands, and a salsa band. Located 35 minutes from downtown Nashville, our School of Music houses an acclaimed faculty of thirty-eight full-time and forty-five adjunct artists/educators. MTSU's faculty are highly active on a national basis, as well as in Asia, Europe, and Latin America. Our low student-to-faculty ratio enables a high quality of personal instruction, interaction and learning. Our prime objective is to fully invest in each student's future, providing an outstanding educational experience that will help ensure professional success.

MTSU houses the Center for Popular Music, a nationally recognized repository of recordings, books, music and periodicals for research on popular music in America and the Center for Chinese Music and Culture, which provides numerous opportunities for the performance and study of all aspects of Chinese music. The Centers are directed by professional musicologists who are widely acknowledged as specialists in their respective fields. MTSU is home to the Department of Recording Industry (RIM), which offers an M.F.A. in Recording Arts and Technologies. The first "All-Steinway" institution in Tennessee, MTSU is fully accredited by the National Association of Schools of Music. Guest artists have included the Beaux Arts Trio, Karrin Allyson, Nigel Clark, Bill Holman, David Liebman, David Maslanka, Robert McDonald, Peter Serkin, Alexa Still, and Kenny Werner. Our alumni teach thousands of students every day in private studios and schools from the kindergarten through university levels. They perform in orchestras, military ensembles and opera companies, appear in clubs and recording studios, compose music for Hollywood films and commercial jingles, lead professional music organizations, work in the music industry, serve as church musicians, and continually seek to enrich the lives of others.

GRADUATE ALUMNI SUCCESS

MTSU Masters graduates in music teach at schools including at the University of Northern Colorado, Vanderbilt University, George Mason University, Western Kentucky University, the University of Texas at El Paso, Trevecca University, Middle Tennessee State University, and numerous private and public high schools. They are active performers, studio artists, church musicians, and arrangers/composers in Nashville. Other graduate alumni also work for NAXOS of America and perform with orchestras and other ensembles in the United States, China, and Europe. Recent alumni are pursuing or have completed their doctoral degrees at Indiana University, Arizona State University, the University of Minnesota, the University of Georgia, the University of Nebraska, and the University of North Dakota.
