

Urban/Community/Regional Planning

Have you ever driven down the streets of Nashville, or even Murfreesboro, and asked questions like “Why are these streets so small? or, Why do we not have a useable public transportation system?” If land use, environmental issues, transportation concerns or housing problems interest you, then you may want to consider City Planning. City planners design and zone areas, meaning they have a say in how their city grows and develops. Some specializations include Transportation Planning, Land Use Planning, Community and Economic Development and Housing Development. Many places require job applicants to have a master’s, so here is a list of all of the Planning Accreditation Board-approved programs.
